- 7) If you write a check for more money than you have in your account, your check will _____.

How did you do? You should know as much as possible about checking before you open an account. Understanding checking account lingo and how these accounts work will help you decide if you are truly ready to have your own account.

(Answers on page 12.)

Choosing YOUR Financial Institution

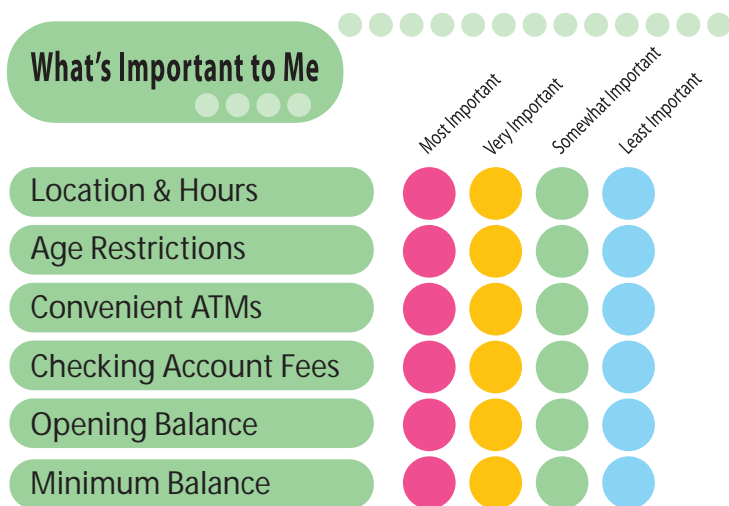

Are you ready to open a checking account? If so, find the best financial institution for you. There are so many different places to pick from that it can be difficult to make a choice. One place to start is with your family and friends; find out where they bank and what they like and dislike about it. This information will provide you with a list of possible financial institutions and help you figure out what you want in a financial institution. However, no matter what anyone else tells you, you need to decide for yourself which institution best fits your life. This means you will need to decide which one will give you the best deals and will be convenient for you to visit.

Many financial institutions offer free student checking or a free checking account if you use direct deposit (have your paycheck automatically deposited into your checking account). Others might offer you a free account if your parents have an account with them.

What's Important to Me

One concern is whether or not you need a parent's signature to open your account (which means that you will share access to your money with your parent). Most financial institutions require you to have a parent's signature to open a checking account if you are under the age of 18. However, there are a few institutions that may allow you to open a checking account by yourself, if you or your parent has a banking history with them.

Opening Your Checking Account

Once you have picked your financial institution, it is time to open your account. A bank representative will help you with this easy process. You will fill out a signature card, which is the contract between you and the financial institution. At this point, the financial institution may also run an account history check to see if you have had problems with credit or checking accounts in the past. When you go to open your account, be sure to bring:

- Picture ID—this can be your driver's license, student ID card, passport, etc.
- Social Security number (Some financial institutions will accept other forms of government identification.)

- Money—some financial institutions will let you open a checking account with one dollar; others will require a minimum opening balance. Find out what your financial institution requires before you get there.
- A parent or guardian, if necessary—your parent will also need a picture ID and a social security number.

It is important to find out about service fees. You do not want money taken from your account without your being aware of it. So ask:

- How much the institution charges simply for having the account (monthly service fee)
- If there is a cost for writing checks (per check fee)
- If there is a limit to the number of checks that can be written without a fee
- What it costs to have checks made (check printing fee)
- If the institution charges for using an ATM (ATM use fee)
- If there is a charge for using teller services
- What it costs to stop payment on a check (stop payment fee)
- How much the institution charges if you bounce a check (insufficient funds penalty)
- If there are any other miscellaneous fees

Making a Deposit

To begin writing checks, you need to have money in your checking account, so it's important to know how to deposit money. You can deposit either cash or checks. If you are depositing cash, you need to fill out a deposit slip. Depositing a check requires a little more work; you must endorse it, which means signing your name on the back of the check:

- 1) Write "For Deposit Only" in the endorsement area (so that no one else can cash it).
- 2) Then sign your name on the back (exactly as it is written on the front).

Note: Protect your privacy. Do not write your account number on the back of the checks for deposit.

The next step is to fill out a deposit slip. Practice filling out the following deposit slip using your name, today's date, account number 9687459865, $10.00 cash, a check for $102.35, another check for $78.05, and a third check for $188.62. Draw a line through any blank spaces.

Tip
Always take cash directly to the teller.

The third step is actually depositing your money, which means giving your money to the financial institution to put into your account. There are different ways to deposit your money:

- take it to the financial institution and give it to a teller
- deposit it in the ATM
- drop it in the financial institution's deposit box (most places have both indoor and outdoor deposit boxes)
- mail your deposit to the financial institution

Remember, to avoid theft, cash should be taken directly to a bank teller.

Updating Your Check Register

Once you have made a deposit, you need to enter it in your check register. Look at the sample check register below. Since you are making a deposit, you will need to fill out only three columns: the date, the deposit amount, and the balance. You may want to write the source of the deposit under Description of Transactions, such as "Oct. 1st paycheck" or "birthday money." Go ahead and fill in this information. Use today's date and the total deposit amount from your sample deposit slip. To finish, add this deposit to the previous balance.

A	B	C		D		E	F
NUMBER	DATE	DESCRIPTION OF TRANSACTION	TAX	AMOUNT OF PAYMENT DEBT OR FEE (-)		AMOUNT OF DEPOSIT OR CREDIT(+)	BALANCE FORWARD
							50.00

Fee or Free: You Decide (from p. 10). The correct answer depends on your financial institution. Fees vary from one institution to another. Be sure to ask about the cost of the services you are interested in using.

Making a Withdrawal

The three most common ways to withdraw money from your checking account are:

Visiting an ATM

To withdraw cash from an ATM machine, you need your ATM card and your PIN number. Insert your card into the ATM machine and use the keypad to give the machine the requested information. Remember to remove your cash, card, and receipt from the ATM when you are finished.

Using your debit card

If your financial institution has given you a debit card, you may also use it to make withdrawals. When you use your debit card at a store, you may be asked to enter your PIN number or you may have to sign a receipt.

Writing a check

Of course, you can always write a check. Writing a check is like signing a contract; it is important to understand all of the information and make sure it is correct. When you write a check, you need to be sure to fill it in completely. Notice that there are six blank lines on the sample check. For your check to be valid, you must write the correct information on each line. Fill out the sample check using the following directions:

- 1) Enter today's date.
- 2) Write who the check is to, in this case, fill in DVDs Plus.
- 3) Write the dollar amount of $19.85 in numbers. (Sometimes this is a box.)
- 4) Write out the dollar amount of nineteen dollars and 85/100.
- 5) Write in "Juan's birthday present." This is optional, but it will help you to remember why you wrote the check.
- 6) Sign your name.

STOP PAYMENT

If you lose a check or have one stolen, you can call your financial institution and ask to stop payment on that check. When you call, the teller will ask for the check number, the date on which it was written, the amount for which it was written, and to whom it was written. This service will cost from $5.00 to $25.00 and is good for only six months. The fee for stopping checks can really add up, so keep your checks safe.

Updating Your Check Register

No matter how you make the withdrawal, you should immediately enter it into your check register. Forgetting to keep track of all of your withdrawals may result in bounced checks. Even if you are in a hurry, you will save yourself time and money later by recording your withdrawals in your check register immediately. Look at the sample register. (See page 6.) When you write a check:

- A) Fill in the first column with your check number, otherwise leave this line blank.
- B) Fill in the Date column.
- C) In the Description of Transaction column, fill in the type of withdrawal you made, unless you wrote a check. If you wrote a check, write the name of the person to whom you wrote the check.
- D) In the Payment/Debit(-) column, fill in the amount of your withdrawal. Also include any amount you were charged for using a foreign ATM machine or fee you were charged for using your debit card.
- E) Leave the Deposit/Credit(+) column blank.
- F) In the Balance column, subtract your Payment/Debit(-) amount and the Fee amount from the previous balance amount.

For the following situations, practice using the check register on page 6:

- Today you went to DVDs Plus and wrote check #323 for $19.85.
- Today you used your debit card to buy $10.00 worth of gas at Kelli's Gas Mart and were charged $0.35 for using your debit card.
- Today you stopped by another institution's ATM machine and took out $40.00. You were charged a $4.00 fee for this transaction.

Bounced Checks Be Aware

If you write a check for an amount that is greater than the amount of money you have in your checking account, you will bounce a check. Your financial institution may charge you $25.00 for a bounced check, and the merchant may charge you another $25.00. As if this extra $50.00 were not bad enough, too many bounced checks will damage your credit record and may result in your bank closing your checking account.

Using My Debit Card

A debit card may come with your checking account. A debit card looks similar to an ATM card or a credit card, but it doesn't work the same. In fact, not all debit cards are alike; each financial institution offers different features. Some charge a fee for making purchases with your debit card, but most don't. Be sure you know how your debit card works.

You can use your debit card at an ATM machine or at places of business. When you use your debit card, you are making a withdrawal from your checking account. Your debit card may have a VISA or MasterCard logo on it, but it is not the same as a credit card. You use your debit card to access money in your checking account for purchases anywhere that a credit card is accepted. The money will be immediately withdrawn from your checking account.

You will either be asked to sign a receipt or enter your PIN number when you use your debit card. For example, if you use your debit card at a gas pump that accepts ATM cards, you will be asked to enter your pin number into the key pad.

Is having a debit card good or bad? Only you can decide whether it will be best for you. Check out the pros and cons.

Debit Card Pros

- It is easier to use than filling out a check
- It is accepted more often than checks
- It does not provide your phone number, address, or driver's license number to the merchant
- If it is lost or stolen, you can easily inactivate it by making a telephone call

Debit Card Cons

- People often forget to fill out their check register when they use their debit cards because they do not need to take out their checkbooks
- Merchants might charge you a fee for using it
- The money is taken out of your account immediately, whereas a check often takes a couple days to be processed
- If you use your overdraft line of credit, you will have to pay high fees and possibly interest
- If stolen, the card can be used to take money from your account

Remember to always:

- check the receipt amount before signing it
- keep your PIN number private
- have the phone number handy to report a missing or stolen debit card

If you think you want a debit card, be sure to ask your financial institution for a list of its related fees.

Reading Your Statement...

Each month your financial institution will send you a monthly account statement that lists all of your transactions from the past month. However, the account balance on the statement will probably be different than the one in your check register because you may have made additional transactions since your statement was mailed. It is a good idea to find the differences between your monthly account statement and your check register; this is called reconciling your account. Reconciling your account will help you keep a good record of your spending and help you find any errors that you or the financial institution may have made.

Make a Note: A checking account is a great responsibility. Your actions now will affect your ability to get credit later, so handle your checking account wisely!

Now that you know what a checking account is, the next thing is how to use it while avoiding fees. Take a few minutes and consider whether the following may have a service fee or are always free.

FEE
FREE

FEE or FREE: You Decide

- Making a cash deposit at the teller counter
- Receiving your checking account statement in the mail
- Asking for copies of checks you wrote
- Using your financial institution's ATM too much
- Bouncing a check
- Going to the ATM and getting a mini or full statement of your account
- Getting cash at the closest ATM—not at your financial institution's ATM
- Going below the minimum balance

Check Writing Tips

- ❖ Always use permanent ink (preferably blue or black).
- ❖ Draw a wavy line through any blank spaces on your check so that no one else can add more information (such as an increased amount).
- ❖ If you fix a mistake on a check, write your initials right above the correction.
- ❖ If you need to rewrite a check, make a big X and write Void over the old one. Tear up or shred your voided check.
- ❖ Writing a check for a later date (post-dating) is illegal.
- ❖ Never give someone a blank check (a check that you have signed but on which you have not filled in the dollar amount).
- ❖ Always use a legible signature. Since your financial institution compares your signed checks with your signature card, it is harder to forge a legible signature than a scrawled one.
